 INFANTA'DO, a territory in Spain, containing the towns of Alcozen, Salmeron and Valdeolivas; so call'd, because formerly it was the dower of an infanta. In process of time, it came to the family of Mendoza, and was, by Ferdinand and Elizabeth, king and queen of Aragon and Castile, erected into a dukedom in favour of its owner, D. James Hurtado de Mendoza, then marquis of Santillana, which title is now given to his eldest son, the father being styled duke of Infantado. The family of Mendoza, or Hurtado de Mendoza, which is the same thing, is of great antiquity, and ancient nobility, the duke's progenitors having been created marquises of Santillana, by king John the 1st of Spain, in the year 1445. Their arms are, Parti per faulxier, in chief, and laz vest, a bend gules, coytiz'd or, the dexter and sinister sides or, with these words, Ave Maria grana plina azure.

JACA, f. f. a coat of mail.

JACA, f. f. a tree growing in some islands of India near the water, it is very tall and thick, the leaf a span long, of a light green. The fruit is large, long, and thick, all of a dark green, cover'd with a hard rind set thick with prickles, especially on the Malabar coast; for those of Goa are not so good: when ripe, it has a good scent; and there are two sorts of it, the one call'd barca, which is the best, the other papa, or girafel, which is not so good, and is known by its softness, for it yields under the finger like dough. It grows out of the trunk of the tree, and branches; cutting it open from end to end, it appears all white within and pulpy, but divided into cells or holes full of kernels bigger than dates, white within like chestnuts, and covered with a dusky red. They are not good raw, but roasted, have a pleasant taste, and are provocatives to venery. Christ. Acosta, Nat. Hist. E. Ind.

JACAPUCA'YA, f. m. one of the largest trees in the province of Brasil, in South-America, bearing a fruit like a chalice, with a cover to it, full of a sort of nuts, or kernels, like mirabolans. The cover comes off of itself, when full ripe, so that the fruit falls out. If they eat many of them raw, they cause all the hair of the body to fall off, but boil'd, they do no harm. They use the shell for a drinking-cup. The wood of the tree is very hard, and not subject to rot.

JAMBÓ, f. m. a sort of fruit in the East-Indies, pleasant to the sight, and very delicious both for scent and taste. The tree that produces it, is as large as the biggest orange-trees in Spain, very thick of boughs, making a fine shade, and pleasing to the sight. The trunk and boughs are of a dark colour, and easily break. The leaf is beautiful and smooth, of a bright green on the outside, and a darker within, about a span long. The fruit is about as big as a good pear, and there are two sorts of it; some of such a dark brown, that they almost look black, and most of these have no stone in them, and are the best in all respects. The others are white, and have a white stone, hard, and as big as a peach-stone, smooth, and cover'd with a white downy skin; these, though fit for the nicest palate, are not so good as the others. They smell like a rose, and are cold and moist, and very soft in the mouth, the rind so thin and tender, that it cannot be pared off with a knife. The trees are always full of fruit and blossom, all the ground under it cover'd with blossoms, which look like scarlet, fresh coming out as the old falls off, so that there is blossom, green and ripe fruit all at once. Christ. Acosta, Nat. Hist. E. Ind.

JAMBO'A, a sort of fruit growing in the Philippine islands, twice as big as a man's head, round and yellowish; some of them have white, some red, and some yellow seeds. Their taste is like lemon with a mixture of sweet to the sour. The tree is also like the lemon-tree in bigness and leaves. Gemellii, vol. 5. lib. 2. cap. 4.

JAMBOLA'NOS, a sort of fruit in the East-Indies, like the ripe olives of Cordova, of a harsh taste, which contracts the throat. The leaf is like that of the crab-tree, and tastes like the green myrtle. The wood without is of the colour of the mastick-tree, and the fruit commonly eaten with rice, and pleasant. It is not medicinal, nor much in esteem. Christ. Acosta, Nat. Hist. E. Ind.

JAMUGA, f. f. a sort of side-saddle for a woman to ride on, with a rail about it, or laths, or a frame to set up, that she fits as it were in an arm-chair, and cannot easily fall out, having rests for her back and arms. It was brought into Spain by the Moors, and the name is theirs.

JANDIRO'BA, f. f. a plant in Brasil which runs up the trees, and bears a round fruit like a quince, full of a white pulp within, and in that three beans, which yield a good sort of yellow oil, good against pains in the limbs, proceeding from cold.

JANDUCO'CO, f. m. a bird in Brasil, like an ostrich, very large, lives on prey, and cries so loud, that it is heard half a league. It is all black, has beautiful eyes, a beak like a cock, to which joins a horn almost a span long, which is said to cure any impediment in the tongue, only hanging it about the neck.

JANGO'MA, f. f. a fruit in the East-Indies, somewhat like the service or forb-apple, and in colour and taste like a plum not thorough ripe. The tree is like the plum-tree, as is the leaf and blossom. It grows in the fields, woods, and gardens. The fruit, though ripe, before it is eaten, is softened betwixt the fingers, and is very astringent, and therefore is used for binding. Christ. Aosta, Nat. Hist. E. Ind.

JANIPA'BA, f. m. a very beautiful tree in Brasil, of a delightful green; changes its leaves every month, and they are like those of the walnut-tree; bears a fruit in shape like an orange, in taste like a quince, excellent against the flux. The juice of it is first white, but rubbing the skin with it, it soon turns wonderful black, which lasts nine days, and the Indians use it to colour their skins with; this is before the fruit is ripe.

LLAMAS, f. f. a sort of cattle peculiar to the kingdom of Peru, which the Spaniards call Carneros de las Indias, or West-India sheep; the flesh of them is good to eat, as our mutton, and the wool for cloathing; besides, they serve for beasts of burden, like horses, or asses, and have no charge of shoeing, of pack-saddles, or corn to feed them, being satisfied with what grass they find. There are two sorts of them, the one call'd pacos, which are woolly, the others are smoother, but better for burthen. They are all bigger than our largest sheep, and somewhat less than large calves, their neck is long like a camel's, and they have need of it to graze, being very tall. Some are quite white, others quite black, others grey. Their lambs are the best meat in the world. These sheep are drove in flocks of 10, 50, or 1000 together, like pack-horses, with their loads of all sorts of commodities; and it is they that carry all the silver from the mines of Potosi to Arica, which is seventy leagues; and formerly they carry'd it to Arequipa, which is 150 leagues. Every sheep commonly carries about an hundred weight, or an hundred and a half; but if they are to travel far, they go but two, three, or at most four leagues a day; if it be but for one day's journey, one of these sheep will carry two hundred weight, or more, and will travel between eight and ten leagues. They naturally affect cold, and therefore live moit on the mountains, and die often with heat in the plains. The smooth sheep will sometimes stop on a sudden, and stand a long time gazing a man in the face, that it will make one laugh to see them; but now and then they will take a fright, and run away to the mountains, so that not being able to overtake them, they are forced, for fear of losing the plate, to shoot them. The pacos or woolly sheep sometimes take rest under their burden, and lie down, and then they may kill them sooner than make them rise. The way the Indians use to get them up, is to stop, and sitting down by them, to stroke, and make much of them, till their anger is over, which is sometimes two or three hours. F. J. Acost. Nat. Hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 45. pag. 203.

 MAGUEY, f. m. is the tree of wonders, for it yields water, wine, oil, vinegar, honey; a sort of must like that of new wine boil'd, thread and needles, besides many other things: it is therefore much valued in New-Spain, and grows wild, and is also cultivated: the leaves of it are broad and coarse, ending in a sharp strong point, which serves either for a pin, or to sew with, and this is the needle;

- and from the leaf they draw out the threads, which are its fibres. The body or trunk of the tree being large, when it is young and tender, they cut a hollow in it, to which the sap or moisture rises from the root, and this they drink instead of water, being cool and sweet; this liquor boil'd, is like wine; setting it four, it serves for vinegar; being boil'd to a consistence, it is honey; and half boil'd, it is like the must above mention'd, well tasted and wholesome, and in my opinion better than that which is made of grapes. So that, according as they boil it, there comes from it several sorts of liquors; and the quantity the tree yields is great, being several quarts every day for some time. The wood of this tree is spongy, and serves to keep fire a long time, like the match used by soldiers. F. J. Acosta, Nat. Hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 23. pag. 254.

MAN, f. m. is used, joined with other words, for máno, a hand.
Buena máno derecha, a good righthand, literally; metaph. good luck, success.
 MANA', f. f. manna, which the Israelites fed on in the desert.
 MANA', f. m. the kind, easy, and medicinal manna found in the province of Usbeck in Persia, and thence sent to Ormuz, and all over India. There are five sorts of it in those parts, one white, small, in grains like comfit, and sweet as honey, and this some say, is a dew that falls on those trees, whence they gather it, and they keep it in glass vessels, well stopp'd from the air. Others say, it is a gum coming from the same tree; another sort, they say grows on thistles, whence they draw it, beating them with staves; it is of a ruddy colour, and of the bigness of a coriander seed. This, some think to be the fruit, others, the gum of those thistles; and the Persians reckon it better and wholesomer than the other. The third sort is in bigger pieces, and mix'd with some leaves, white, and like the manna of Calabria: this most used, and dearest. Another sort is sold about India, liquid, in skins and pots, like white honey, but soon decays. All these purge with ease, and without danger. Another sort, in bits bigger than that of Calabria, and not white, is sold at Ormuz, and in several parts of India; this purges more violently, and therefore the common sort reckon it the better, as also because it is cheaper; but this is a compositiō. It is so safe a medicine, that it is given to children and women with child. Christ. Acqto, Hist. E. Ind.

MANGO, f. m. an haft, helve, or handle.

MANGO, f. m. the mango, well known in England, brought over in pickle, and an excellent sauce; the tree that bears it is large, and thick of boughs; the fruit commonly bigger than a goose egg, but in some parts of India there are of them that weigh above two pounds: some of them are green, some with a mixture of red, and some yellow, but all from the same tree. This fruit is very pleasant to the taste and smell, and much better than the quince. It is eaten several ways, and all of them good; as also preserved and pickled, opening it, and filling the shell with garlick, mustard, salt and oil, and then putting it into vinegar; it is cold and moist: before it is quite ripe, this fruit is of a very harsh taste, but ripe, is very sweet and pleasant. The kernel in its stone eaten raw, is bitter, but good to kill worms, and against the flux; roasted, it tastes like an acorn: there are some mangoes without any stone. There is a sort of wild mangoes which are rank poison, that there is no antidote yet known against them. Christ. Acoft. Nat. Hist. East Ind.

MAYZ, f. m. Indian wheat, to make bread of, is the only sort of grain found in the West-Indies; it grows on a strong reed with large grains, and sometimes two ears on a reed, on one of which 700 grains of wheat have been told. They sow it grain by grain, and not scattering as we do our wheat; and it requires a hot and moist soil. There are two sorts of it, one large and substantial, the other small and dry, which they call moreche. The leaves of it and the reed are very good food for the cattle, green; and dry, it serves as well as straw. The grain is better for beasts than barley, but they must drink before they eat it, for if they drink after it, it swells and gives them the gripes. The Indians eat it hot boiled, and call it nete, and sometimes toasted. There is a sort of it large and round, which the Spaniards eat toasted; they also grind it and make cakes, which they eat hot; and these, in some places, they call arepas; they also make bread to keep, and sweet cakes of it. The Indians make drink of it, as we do of barley; this they call in Peru, azua, and in most other parts, chicha, which is very strong, and makes them drunk, for which reason it is prohibited. They have also a way of extracting an oil from it, which is good, and serves instead of butter or oil of olives. Jes. de Acost. Nat. Hist. of the West-Indies, lib. 4. cap. 16. p. 236.

Nuez de especia, the well known spice called nutmeg. The tree is about the bigness of a pear-tree, the leaf roundish, but pointed. It grows best in Banda; such as Maluco and Ceylon produce, being less, and not valued. The outward rind is fleshy and hard, which the natives eat with salt and vinegar, and is of a pleasant aromatick taste. The Portuguese preserve the whole nutmeg before it is full ripe. The nut is much used by the Brachman physicians for all old distempers in the brain, for the palsy, and other distempers that affect the nerves, and for diseases in the matrix. The outward rind, when thorough ripe, is taken off, and is the spice we commonly call mace, which is hot and dry in the third degree. It is believed that the ancients knew neither the mace nor nutmeg. In Banda they call the nutmeg pala, in Arabick iauziband, in Latin nux myristica, or nux moscata, in Italian noce moscata, in French nois muscade, and in Portuguese noz moscada. Nutmeg corrects and cures a stinking breath, clears the eye-sight, comforts the stomach, digests meat, and expels wind; strengthens the liver and milt, and provokes urine. Christ. Acofta, Nat. Hift. East Ind.

OPIO, f. m. the well-known soporific, called opium. It is no other than the juice or gum of poppies in India, and particularly about Cambayette; but so large, that some of them will hold a pint of water. The opium is made by making an incision in the white poppies, the black being rarely used, that the liquor may flow from it. All opium is made after this manner; yet there are several veral sorts of it; as that of Cairo, which is good, white, and dear; that of Adem, which is black and very hard; that of Cambaya, Chitor, and Mandon, which is more ruddy and soft. But Cambaya yields the most, and it is most certainly made as above, to which I am an eye-witness. The opium is cold in the extremity of the fourth degree, and so stupifying, that ill used it is certain death. In the East, generally, they use themselves to take it daily, from their infancy, so that there are men will take an incredible quantity without receiving any harm. Vid. Christ. Acst. Nat. Hist. E. Ind.

In China, they eat this root, when fresh, boiled with their meat, as we do turnips. They also distil a water from it, used by the better sort. Monardi says it now grows in New-Spain.
Pálo de serpe, a plant, whereof there are two sorts, the one growing like ivy, and looking at a distance like a natural snake, the leaves like briony. It is accounted an excellent remedy against the bite of snakes or adders, and most Indians carry it about them to defend themselves against those creatures, which they say fly from the smell of it, and if they touch it presently die. The other sort is very slender, with small long leaves, soft and smooth, of a dark green. The root of it macerated in wine or water, is a certain cure for all bites of venomous serpents, all other poisons, and several distempers; and the Indians affirm any man is safe against those creatures, only carrying it in his hand. There is also a great tree, called by this name, and has the same virtue. Christ. Acosta, Nat. Hist. E. Ind.

Pérrro con concérro, a dog with a bell, a servant that has a wife, or hangers on.
Dar pérrro, to cheat, to deceive.
Ponerse como un pérrro, à hecho un pérrro, to fall easily in a passion.
 Prov. A pérrro viejo nunca tus tus, no flying of tus tus to an old dog; that is the word for appeasing a dog in Spain. In English, no catching of old birds with chaff.
 Prov. Pérrro ladraán, nunca buón cazadór, or mordór, a barking dog is never a good hunter or biter; we say, a barking dog never bites.
 Prov. El pérrro con rabia a su amo muérde,
 a mad dog bites his own master;
 there is no trusting to madmen, or people in a rage.
 Prov. Cómo el pérrro del horteláno, que ni come las bérzas, ni las dáxa comer a otro, like the gardener's dog, that neither eats cabbage, nor will let others eat it; we say, like a dog in a manger, that will neither eat hay, nor let the horse eat it.

 Prov. A otro pérrro con esse huéssó, throw that bone to another dog; that is, put that trick upon another, it will not take with me.
 Prov. Echa fuera el pérrro, que córta mi jérrro, turn out the dog, for my son-in-law carves; a modest way to tell a man he does ill; taken from a son-in-law, who pretending to carve, and not knowing how to do it, threw the meat down, and the dogs run away with it; whereupon the father-in-law, to save finding fault with him, the next time said, turn out the dog, for my son-in-law carves, that by the caution of the dog he might take warning.
 Prov. El pérrro mi amígo, la mugér mi enemígo, el hije mi señor, the dog is my friend, the wife my enemy, the son my master; because the dog is ever faithful, the wife upon the least dis-obligation is angry, and the son being too much fondled, commonly grows above his parents.
 Prov. Los pérrros de Zorita, que cuándo no tienen a qual, ános a otros se muérden, Zorita's dogs, who, when they find no body else, bite one another;
 they say, Zorita was an alcalde, or judge, who kept very fierce dogs, tied up all day, and being let loose at night, finding no body else to fall upon, they tore one another; not unlike what we say of my lord Thomond's cocks.
 Prov. Quién con pérrros se échó, con pulgas se le cantó, he who lies down with dogs, rises with fleas; we say, lie with beggars, and you will be lousy.
 Prov. Quién a su pérrro quiere matár, rábia le ha de levantar, he who has a mind to kill his dog, must say he is mad; we say, give a dog an ill name,
 and his work is done.
 Prov. Para azotar el pérrro, que se come el hierro, if you want an excuse to whip a dog, it is enough to say he eats iron; that is, you need never want an excuse to beat a dog, or to fall out with servants and inferiors; or in English, you need never want a stick to beat a dog.
 Prov. Todo viene junto, cómo al pérrro los pálos, all comes together, like a beating to a dog, when several troubles come together; because we often defer beating a dog for every small fault, and at last beat him for all together.
 Prov. Pérrro en barriócho, lábra sin pro-vecho, a dog in a plough'd or in a fallow field, barks to no purpose; because there is nothing to guard.
 Prov. Pérrro lanúdo, muérto a número, y no creyó de ninguno, a shock dog is flayed, and no body believes it, because his thick bushy hair makes him look big, and no body can see how lean he is.
 Prov. Pérrro que mucho ládra, bién guárda, a dog that barks much, guards well; because his barking frights away thieves, and gives warning to his master of the approach of any.
 Prov. Dos pérrros a un can, mal tráso le dan, two dogs upon one use him ill;
 two to one is odds.
 Prov. El que ha de besár el pérrro en el culo, no ha menester limpiárse mucho, he who is to kiss the dog's arse, needs not be too nice in going about indisferent things.
 Prov. Ni pérrro, ni négro, ni mózo Gal-légo, neither dog, nor black, nor servant

- vant born in Galicia; a saying of such as do not like to keep any of them.
- Prov. El férro del herrero, que duerme a las martilladas, y despierta a las juntilladas, the smith's dog sleeps whilst they are hammering, and awakes at the clattering of the teeth; that is, being used to it, can sleep while they work, but is sure to wake when they eat; applied to those who are idle whilst others work, but always ready at eating.

Piedra aguzadera, a grindstone.
Piedra arenisca, a sort of mouldering stone.
Piedra del agüla, the eagle's stone. In Latin, acites, from the Greek αἰτῆς, an eagle. This bird has always two of these stones in its nest, without which it cannot lay; they are male and female; the male less than the female; as big as a gall-nut, somewhat reddish, and within it is another hard stone; the female is oval, whitish, or rather of an ash-colour, and easily moulders, and that which is within is like clay and sand: both of them are of great virtue in facilitating the birth: being tied to the left arm, they retain the birth, when there is danger of miscarrying, thro' the lubricity of the matrix; but when the proper time to be delivered is come, taking it from the arm, and tying it to the left thigh, the woman will be delivered with ease. So says doctor Laguna upon Dietscorides, l. b. 5. But as soon as the infant is born, the stone must be taken away, else it would, if left there a moment, bring down the matrix, which it attracts, as the loadstone does steel.
Piedra bezár. Vid. BEZÁ'R.
Piedra de beziga, the stone in the bladder.
Piedra a zúfre, brimstone.
Piedra de bijada, this is a sort of green stone, and the greener the better, found in the West-Indies, but rare; it has a wonderful virtue to prevent and cure the cholick, and to expel gravel or the stone: it eases pains in the kidneys, and is good against pains in the stomach. Vid. Monardes, fol. 22.
Piedra de leche, a stone good for women's milk.
Piedra para la madre, a sort of heavy oval, black, and smooth stone, brought from New-Spain, which, applied to a woman's navel, will stick there of itself, and ease her of fits of the mother. Vid. Monardes, fol. 119.

 Prov. Piedra movidiza no la cubre moho, a rolling stone never gathers moss.
 Prov. Tirar la piedra, y esceder la mano, to throw the stone, and hide the hand. To do mischief, and not to be seen in it.
 Prov. Matar dos páxaros con una piedra, to kill two birds with one stone.
 Prov. Quién calla piedras apaña, he that is silent gathers stones; that is, if a man says little, he thinks the more; he meditates revenge.
 Prov. Quién en una piedra dos veces tro pieza, no es maravilla se quiebre la cabeza, he that stumbles twice at one stone, it is no wonder if he breaks his head for his heedlessness.
 Prov. Si la piedra da en el cántaro, mal para el cántaro, y si el cántaro da en la piedra, también se quiebra, if the stone hits the pitcher, it is bad for the pitcher, still it is broke. To denote, we must not contend with the more powerful; for whether they fall upon us, or we upon them, still we come by the worse; or, as we say, the weakest goes to the wall.
 PIEDRECICA, f. f. PIEDRECILLA, or PIEDRECITA, a little stone.
 PIE'L, f. m. a skin. Latin pellis.
 Prov. De piel agena larga la correa, of another man's skin, or leather, a long thong, or strap; that is, we are always free of what is not our own.

PIMENTO'N, f. m. Guiney pepper, which grows in long green cods, and when dry turns red, being full of yellowish flat seeds; both the cods and seeds very hot; pickled green, they are excellent, but very strong.

PIMIENTA, f. f. pepper. The plant it grows on is like a vine, but is always close to a tree or pole, up which it runs to the very top; it bears within a year, but more every year after; it is knotty at small distances, and out of every knot grows a leaf, sharp at the end, of a dark green on the inside, and a light green without. The root is very small and superficial; at every stalk of a leaf grows a cluster of pepper, some of which have fifty corns, and the least thirty; the pepper, when green, is plucked like capers to eat, and in India they call it achor. The plants of the white and black pepper differ in nothing, but that the leaf of the white is thinner, and somewhat smother; the white pepper is better than the black, either for taste, relish, or wholesomeness. There is also a sort of long pepper, the plant whereof differs from the other, and the pepper itself is much inferior to both the white and black. This long pepper grows in Bengala and Jaova, the white and black along the coast of Malabar, and some other places, but not so good. There is another sort, which is hollow, and called among them canarin. The Malabars call pepper molang; the Canarines, miri; in Malaca, lada; in Arabia, sisil; in Guzarat and Decan, moricho; in Bengala, merwis; in Greece, peperi; in Latin, piper; in Spanish, as above; in Portuguese, pimenta; in Catalonia, pebre; in Italian, pepe; in French, poivre; in High-Dutch, peffo; in Flemish, peperens. This and more to the purpose in Acst. Nat. Hist. Ind.

Pimienta de Tabasco, Tobacco pepper, because growing in that province on very large trees, called by the Indians xo.oxochil. The leaves of the tree are like those of an orange-tree, very odoriferous; the flowers of a deep red, smelling like the orange-flower; the fruit is round, growing in clusters, first green, then red, and at last black; of a sharp bitter taste, and a good smell, hot and dry in the third degree, so that it is used instead of pepper. It cherishes the heart and stomach, is good for the matrix, expels wind, opens obstructions, and provokes urine and the monthly terms.

Pimienta larga, long pepper. It is a very good sort of pepper, growing in the West-Indies, on a long stalk, about which the grains of pepper stick, and when dry easily rub off. Vid. Monarda, fol. 16.

Pimienta de Jamaica, Jamaica pepper. It is not unlike the common black pepper, with this difference, that there is a little mark on one part of it, like the head of a clove; and it has the taste of clove, as well as of pepper, and is therefore called by some all-spice.

PIÑA, f. f. a pine-apple; those we see in England have nothing in them, but in Spain and other countries, every knob on them contains a small and very sweet kernel.
 PIÑA, f. f. the pine-apple of the West-Indies, is as big, and shaped like our pine-apple, but differs in all other respects, because it has no kernels, nor little partitions, but is all an eatable pulp, taking off the outward rind; it has an excellent smell, and is very pleasant to eat; the taste of it is sweet and sharp, and juicy; they cut them in slices, and lay them a while in salt and water. It grows on a long reed or stalk, which springs up among abundance of leaves, like a lily; on the top of each of them is the pine-apple; it grows in hot and moist countries; they make an excellent conserve of them. Vid. F. J. Acq. Nat. Hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 19. p. 243.

PION, f. m. a kernel of a pine-apple.

Piñones purgativos, West-India purging nuts, but not the same as the Barbadoes nuts, or avellanas purgativas, being a more gentle medicine than that, and working by stool and vomit, to purge gross humours; they are hot in the third degree, and dry in the second; they grow in New-Spain, in the nature of pine-apples, whence they have their name. Vid. Monardes, fol. 27.

Piñones de Meluco. This tree is said to grow in great plenty in the Melucca islands, whence it takes its name, as also in the country of Malabar, being as big as a pear-tree, the leaf smooth, green, thin, and hot in the mouth; the fruit three-cornered, as big as a small nut, divided into small white kernels, like those of the pine-apple: it is given in clysters for the sciatica, and stoppage of urine; and in both to carry off putrid viscid humours; and for the asthma, for which it is in great esteem. Vid. Acq. Nat. Hist. E. Ind.

Piñones de púna, a fruit in the West-Indies, like pine-apples, of which Acosta, in his Nat. Hist. W. Ind. gives no other account.

PIONNES, f. m. in falconry, they give this name to the pinions of the wings of a bird.

PLATA, f. f. silver; the metal next in value to gold. It is generally found in mines on stony desert mountains, though some little has been found in the plain. There are two sorts of veins, one whereof they call loose, the other fixed; the loose are only pieces of ore found in some chance place, which once taken away, there is no more; the fixed veins, or which spread out every way in depth, and all sides, like the body of a tree and its branches. The Indian way of refining the ore, was by melting, which makes the metal run one way, and the dross another: to this purpose at Potosi they made little earthen fire-pans, which they call guairas, with holes all round them, on which they placed the crucible, and setting these pans on the tops of the mountains, the wind that blows there constantly, melted the ore, which could not be made to run with any bellows whatsoever: the silver of the mines of Porco runs better with bellows; but the method now in use is to separate the silver from the dross with quicksilver, thus; they pound the ore to dust in mills, and sift it as we do rubbish to make mortar; then they steep that fine dust in brine made of salt, that the salt may loosen the earth from the metal, then through a fine cloth they squeeze the quicksilver out upon that mass, so that it falls like a dew, which they work up, mould and incorporate with it; thus it used to lie together, and was moulded over several times for twenty days, till the quicksilver had wrought its effect; but now making fires in vaults under it, they find it is prepared in five days by the heat. When the quicksilver has drawn all the metal to it, they put this mass into great troughs of water, where they wash it till all the dross runs off, and the pure metal remains behind; the clean silver they squeeze in a cloth, which fetches out all the quicksilver that is not incorporated in it. The rest of the mass, made like a sugar-loaf, is covered with an earthen pan of that shape, and a great fire made about it, all the quicksilver runs out at the pipe, like distilled water from a limbeck, and the silver remains in the same shape, and as big as it was put in, but only the fifth part in weight of what it was, being all like a honey-comb, where the silver has been extracted: then it is cast into bars, and carried to the king's stamping-house, where it is tried and the mark set upon it according to its fineness. Vid. F. Jos. Acost. Nat. Hist. W. Ind. cap. 5. & seq.

Plata virgen, virgin silver, that is, fine, pure, and without any alloy.

PLATANO, f. m. the common plane-tree. Latin platanus.

PLATAFORMA, f. f. a platform in fortification, being a battery to place cannon on; also a draught, or the plan of a work.

PLATANO, f. m. or rather PLANTANO, the plantain, a tree in the West-Indies, which had this name given it by the Spaniards, but for what reason is not known, since there is not the least resemblance betwixt this, and to the plane-tree of Europe. This Indian plantain has one body, or root in the ground, from which many shoots run up without touching one another, but every one grows up, and becomes as it were a distinct tree, with leaves so large, that one of them will cover a man almost from head to foot, of a very fine glossy green: when it is a fathom and a half, or two fathoms high, it bears one only cluster of plantains, sometimes more, sometimes less in number, and I have told 300 upon one cluster. Every plantain is above a span long, more or less, and two or three inches thick, though they vary much; the rind is easily taken off, and all the rest is a solid tender pulp, very good to eat, being wholesome and nourishing, and rather cold than hot. Sometimes the branches are gathered green, and ripen in great jars close covered with an herb peculiar for that purpose; if they let them ripen on the tree, they are better relished, and smell like choice pippins; they last almost all the year, for new shoots are continually running up from the trunk of the plantain, and when one has done, another begins to bear, another is half grown, another shoots out anew, so that they succeed one another all the year about. As soon as the cluster is gathered, they cut down that branch, or shoot, for it never bears more than one at once, but the trunk or root remains and shoots afresh till it is spent, which is for several years; it requires much moisture and heat; they throw ashes on the root to improve it; and there are woods of plantains which are very profitable, because it is the fruit most generally used in the West-Indies: they make wine of it, and eat it raw or roasted, several ways dressed and preserved: the branches are neither good for fire, nor any other use, but the leaves may serve to write on in case of necessity. Vid. F. Jos. Acost. Nat. Hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 21. p. 247.

RICAMENTE, adv. richly.
 RICA'ZO, f. m. a wealthy rich man.
 RICO, f. m. rich. German. Fer-

merly it signified noble as well as rich.

Ricos honras, or hombres. The laws of Spain, called De la puridad, l. 15. tit. 25 p. 4. gives this definition of them. Ricos honras, according to the custom of Spain, are those whom, in other countries, they call earls and barons. Now they are ricos, or rich, who have much money, and that in all parts is the greatest nobility. So that ricos honras is the old name for the nobility of Spain.

 RO'LLA, f. m. any long round thing, a roll, a scroll of writing; also a sweet cake made like a roll or wreath. It is also a gallows, but differs from that they call horca, in that this latter is of wood, consisting of two upright pieces, or legs, and one across them at top, as is common in England; but the rollo is a stone pillar with long stones laid across on the top of it, so that the four ends hang over the pillar, to which they fasten the ropes to hang malefactors. It also serves for a whipping-post, and there are steps to go up to the pillar, on which, in country towns, the people sit in fair weather, to talk and divert them; whence the phrase, Tener su piedra en el rollo, to have a stone at the gallows. Which is to be respected; because, as has been said, the people sit about the steps to converse together; and the chief men of the town have a particular place reserved for them, where no other sits. Ironically, it signifies to be proud and conceited.

Rollo de manteca, a roll of butter.

Pjeada en rollo, banelled cod.

Prov. Para los desdichados se hizo el rollo, y para los sin ventura la horca y ródre, the gallows was made for the unfortunate. The rest is only enforcing the same thing, unless we will turn it, the whipping-post was made for the unfortunate, and the gallows and all for the wretched. To signify, that only unfortunate poor people are punished, whilst the greatest villains are safe.

For the better understanding whereof, I will insert two stanzas out of D. Luis de Gongora:

*Aunque entiendo poco Griego,
 En mis griegas he hablado,
 Ciertos versos de musé,
 Ni muy duros, ni muy blandos.
 De dos amantes la historia,
 Contiene, tan pobres sonetos,
 Que ella para una historia,
 Y el no sirve para un verso.*

- RUYBA'RBO, f. m. rhubarb, an excellent medicine, found no where, but in China, whence it is carried to all parts. The best is the freshest, which has something of a dark red, bitter and astringent to the taste, and which chewed, dies like saffron. It is hot and dry in the second degree, has some earthly parts, which makes it astringent; some airy, whence its lightness; and some fiery, which cause its bitterness. Rhubarb is so safe a medicine, that it is given at all times, and to children, and women with child. To purge and cleanse the inward parts, they give the infusion of it, and the powder of it to bind; mixed with spikenard, it has the better effect. It will not bear decoction, for then it loses its virtue. It purges cholera and phlegm, cleanses the stomach, strengthens the liver and spleen, opens obstructions, purges the blood, is good against the yellow jaundice, and dropsy, allays burning fevers, and stops the bloody-flux. Vid. Christi. Acost. Nat. Hist. E. Ind.

 SAGU', f. m. a sort of palm-tree, growing in several parts of the East-Indies naturally, without any improvement, on the banks of rivers. It runs not very high, but is thick; all of it, from the top to the bottom, is a soft substance like a radish, covered with a bark only an inch thick, not very hard nor smooth. They use it thus: they cut it in pieces, and lay it soaking in water, then they take only a narrow slice of the bark, that the remaining part may contain the inward substance, and cut the white within it extraordinary small; this they press with their feet in baskets made of cane, near the river, so that the best of the juice may run through into a vessel set under, by pouring on water; then they take up that substance, so pressed, and put it into moulds made of palm-tree leaves like our cheese-cats, where it hardens a little like soft starch, which being afterwards dried in the sun, serves instead of bread, without the help of an oven. It is very nourishing, and will keep. It is good in broth, and the seeds of it dissolved, thicken like glue. Vid. Gemelli, vol. 5. lib. 2. cap. 4.

 SANDALOS, f. m. sandal, or sanders. The best white and yellow grows in the island Timor, the red only at Tazaram, and on part of the coast of Coromandel. The Indians steep the white and yellow, and grind it on a stone, as we do colours, to anoint their bodies; the best and sweetest of these sorts is the yellow, whereof little is brought into Europe, because it is highly valued in India. All sandal is cold in the third degree, and dry in the second; the white and yellow are good against the headache, when it proceeds from a hot cause. It is applied to the forehead and temples of such people, when they are like to fall into deliriums; pounded and steeped in rose-water and verjuice of grapes, it allays the excessive heat of the stomach; taken inwardly, it cools and cheers in burning fever; mixed with cordial medicines, and applied outwardly, over the heart and liver, and to the pulses, it refreshes the vital spirits. The red sandal is good against rheums falling from the head; and applied with the juice of plantain or chokeweed, or houseleek, or parlain, it is good against inflammations, and the hot gut and imposthumes. Vid. Chy. I. Act. Nat. Hist. E. Ind.

SA'NGRE, f. f. blood. Latin sanguis. Sometimes it is taken for kindred, or consanguinity.

Sangre de dragón, dragon's blood; it is the gum of a tree in the West-Indies, and other parts, which bears a fruit, that being opened has within it the perfect figure of a dragon, standing on his feet, with a long neck, a bristly back, open mouth, and a long tail, as artificial as if it were carved; hence it takes name, which was never known till the discovery of the West-Indies. There are two sorts of the gum, the one called sangre de arago de gota, because it is as it gushes out of the tree, by an incision made: the other sangre de dragón en pan, because it is extracted after the manner of the turpentine, and made into cakes; both of them are a noble colour for painters: they are also medicinal, and stop fluxes, either outwardly applied to the belly, or taken inwardly or by clyster: it heals fresh wounds, fastens the teeth, and makes the gums grow, when decayed; it is temperate, with some little heat. Vid. Monardes, fol. 80.

SAPOTES, f. m. a fruit in New-Spain, whereof there are four several sorts: some they call black sapotes, the tree as big as a walnut, and thick, but the leaves very green, and smaller than those; the fruit is round, and has a very thin green rind; within it is of the colour and taste of cassia, with four small kernels; green, it is poison for fish; ripe, it is very wholesome for sick people. The second sort is called white sapote; the tree is as tall as a pear-tree, the fruit as big as a pear, green without, and white within, with four white kernels; it is good to make people sleep. The third sort is called sapote borracho, or drunken sapote; the tree is like the last, but the branches more slightly; the taste of the fruit is between sweet and tart, but very pleasant, the colour green and yellowish without, and whitish within, with two kernels. The fourth is called elico sapote, or little sapote; the tree is higher and thicker than the walnut, the fruit without is almost purple, and within high coloured, it has four small kernels, placed as it were in niches; the taste is sweet, and the most valued of all that grow in the hot countries. They make a composition with it, which the ladies chew to keep their teeth white. Vid. Gemell, vol. 6. lib. 2. cap. 10.

SPO'DIO, f. m. This is a white concrete moiſture in the hollow branches of trees, growing like canes with knots. This tree, reed, or cane, is thick, and as tall as a poplar, all full of knots, like a cane: it puts out many ſtraight branches full of leaves, four times as big as thoſe of the olive-tree, and thinner. Some of theſe canes in Malábar are ſo thick, that they make boats of them, not hollowing, but only ſlitting them in the middle, and leaving the ends ſtopped by their own knots, which carry two naked blacks, to row them with ſhort oars. Two ſorts of ſpódio are found in theſe canes, the one white and thick, the other blacker, both equally valued. It is good to cool the inward parts and brain, to ſtop the flux. Vid. *Chriſt. Acroſt. TUNA'Y TU'NAL, f. f. the fruit and tree; this tree may rather be called a heap of leaves one upon another, wherein it differs from all others, for there grows a leaf, and from that another, and so on one from another till the end; but as other leaves sprout out above, or on the sides, those below grow thick, and almost lose the shape of a leaf, twigs and branches, but all prickly, rough, and ugly; and therefore in some places they call it cárido, that is, thistle: the wild ones bear no fruit, or if they do, it is good for nothing; those in gardens bear the fruit, called tunas, much esteemed, bigger than large plums; they open the shell, which is thick, and within it there is pulp and seeds like those of a fig, very pleasant and sweet, especially the white ones, and they have a pretty scent; the red are not so good generally: there is another sort of tunales, which, though they bear no fruit, are more valued, because they yield the cocheneal; of which see more, verb. GRA'NA. H. F. Jes. Acost. Nat. Hist. W. Ind. lib. 4. cap. 23. p. 254.

 VICTORIOSISMO, MA, adj. sup. very victorious.
 VICTORIOSO, SA, adj. victorious, conquering.
 VICTUALLA, vid. VITUALLA.
 VICU'ÑAS, f. f. are a sort of wild beasts in the kingdom of Peru, somewhat resembling goats, but without horns, and bigger than goats, and less than large calves; no other part of the world has them but Peru and Chile, where they live on the highest mountains, and most solitary and coldest places, which the Indians called funas. The froit and snow is so far from hurting, that they seem pleasing to them; their colour is a light murrey; they go in flocks, and are very swift, flying from men, or other beasts, as being very fearful, and when they fly, they drive their young before them: they do not appear to increase much, and therefore the Inga kings had forbid hunting them, but upon great solemnities: since the coming of the Spaniards, too much liberty has been allowed. The Indians meet two or 3000 and making a ring close by degrees, catch as many as they please, letting the females go to breed; they shear them, and of their wool make the finest coverlets, or blankets in the world, for it is as soft as silk, very lasting, and the colour being natural, never fades: they are cool, and good for hot weather, and some say they are wholesome for inflammation, or the gout. The flesh of them is not good, but the Indians eat it; the flesh of them just killed, and applied to the eyes, infallibly affwages any pain in them: these beasts also afford the precious bezoar stone. Vid. F. Jey. Acst. Nar. Hist. W. Ind. l. v. 4. cap. 40. p. 299.

VID

VID, f. f. a vine. Latin vinis. It is also that part of a woman which comes out with the after-birth, so called, because it is knotty.

- Vid parrado*, a vine that grows up against a wall, or over an arbour.
Vid parrada, a vine that is blasted.
Vid en brazos, a vine that spreads in many branches.
Vid tendida, a vine that lies flat.
Vides abrazadas, vines that run up trees.
Vid trucha, a vine trunk without branches.
 Prov. De labra del pl. na la caña, y de labra mala la viga, plant your vineyard from a good vine, and your daughter from a good mother; that is, in all things chase the best stock to breed from.
 VIDA, f. f. life. Latin vita.
Hivero de hombre, y de mala vida, a good or an ill liver.
Deje labra vida, to live at one's ease.
 Prov. No es la vida del hombre de guano que se traher, an honest man lives no longer than a treacherous villain pleases; because a good man fearing nothing, is always exposed to the treachery of villains.
 Prov. Viva sin amigos, muerte sin testigo, a life without a friend, ends in death without a witness; he that has no friends in his life-time, has no body to attend him at his death.
 Prov. Medita vida es la cordela, pan y vino la bre rallo, fire and candle are one half of man's support, and wine and bread the other half; they are the most necessary things for a man in this world.

VIE

- VIEGECICA, VIEGECILLA, or VIEGECITA, f. f. a little old woman.
 VIEJA, f. f. an old woman.
 Prov. No digas después, fue vieja, y no se cocia, do not say afterwards, it was old, and would not boil tender; this is a warning to do things in time, or to take heed how we do them; taken from a woman, who having a fowl to boil for her husband's dinner, set it on so late that it was not boiled enough, and excused herself, by alledging it was old.
 Prov. Poco a poco hizo la vieja el cazo, little by little the old woman spins out her distaff full; that is, patience and application carry one through any work, though never so tedious.
 VIEJAMENTE, adv. oldly.
 VIEJO, adj. old. Latin vetus.
 Prov. De oficio nuevo, y de barbero viejo, y de cargo reconducido, y de viento que entra por los oidos, y de madrestra que el nombre le lleva, y de amado, y a tus hijos guarde Dios de parádre, from a new, or unskillful workman, from an old old barber-furgeon, a reconciled friend, a wind that comes in at a hole, or cranny, from a stepmother, whose name alone is enough, from a son-in-law, or wife's son, and from a step-father, God defend your children; because the new workman is unskilful, and does his work ill; an old barber's hand shakes, and he neither shaves nor bleeds well; a reconciled friend is seldom real; the wind through a hole, or cranny, is hurtful; a step-mother in all parts has no good name; a wife's son is not loved by the father-in-law, and the mother rakes all she can for him; and a step-father is as bad as a step-mother.

VIE'JO, f. m. an old man.

Prov. Quién quisiera ser mucho tiempo viejo, comiencelo presto, he that would be long old, must begin betimes; we say, he that would be young when he is old, must be old when he is young.

Prov. Si quieres vivir sano, házete viejo temprano, if you would be healthy, be old betimes; that is, take care of yourself as old men do.

P R Ó L O G O.

LA nacion Inglesa, tan aplicada como erudita, desde algunos años a esta parte, floreció en todo género de ciencias y artes, adelantandose con agigantado passo a las demas naciones del mundo. La curiosa aplicacion a instruirse en las lenguas estrangeras, es ya muy general en estos Reynos; lo que ha sido motivo que se imprimiessen varios Dictionarios, que facilitassen a los Ingleses, la inteligencia de los principales lenguages de la Europa, inteligencia que conduce tanto a los progresos de su comercio, como a los de su erudicion.

A fines del siglo ultimo pasado, un tal Minshew, publicó un especie de vocabulario, bastante defectuoso, en Español y en Inglés; algunos años despues, pareció el Dictionario del Cap. Stephens, obra que mejor se podria llamar, una coleccion de las mas fatuas y disparatadas consonancias, con el nombre de adagios Españoles, con ridiculos comentarios, sobre su verdadero sentido y origen; y lo que mas me admira, es que omitio, esos proverbios expresivos, essas sentencias breves, sacadas de la experiencia y especulacion de nuestros antiguos sabios, que en poco dicen mucho.

En 1740. imprimióse un Dictionario, a cuyo infensato autor se le antojó criar una orthographia nueva, contraria a la etymologia de las voces, al uso común y constante, y a la razon; la falta de talento, hizo caer el zoloch y torpe Pineda, en unos errores crasísimos; es menester numen, fantasia, elevacion, para assegurarle el acierto, saliendo del camino trillado; quedese en la falda, quien no tiene fuerza, para arribar a la cumbre, y no pretenda hacer magisterio lo que es torpéza. Para que se vea claramente la ignorancia pedantesca, de esse descarado escritor, expondré aqui parte de su prólogo, en que regala sus lectores, con un montón de monstruosos disparates, assi empieza.

Muchos han sido los Dictionarios, que a este han precedido, con todo en unos les falta muchas palabras y en todos ay falsas interpretaciones, pues el de la Academia de Briga Real, digo el de Madrid, que deciera de ser perfectissimo, es el mas sutil que imaginarse puede. Que buen principio! havia de decir en unos faltan muchas palabras y diria bien; y en todos ay falsas interpretaciones; felicissima España! afortunados Españoles! que ya les enseñó, el agudo, sutil y docto Pineda, a entenderle! pues el de la Academia, &c. se havrá visto pedanteria y necedad semejante, es posible que un hombre se meta en los cascos, que sabe el solo mas, que una Academia, compuesta de los hombres mas docto, y mas discretos del Reyno? luego profugue assi nuestro zonzorrión. Hablo (con respecto sea dicho de los Señores Académicos) de su orthografia, y digo que la rechazé y pasé a parte, que como nueva y sin autoridad, no sólo no se la de seguir, mas aún con cuidado evitar, siendo contraria a la naturaleza de la lengua Castellana, y a la de los illustres autores della, que han a los Académicos precedido, procurando aquellos con maduro acuerdo, introducir la e con cedilla y estos desterrando la injustamente, como si la pobrecita huviesse cometido crimen de Leza Magestad, ó como si la inquisicion le huviesse puesto un San Benito, por aver dicho la verdad (aquí viene la agudeza) ó por mejor dezir, como si las reglas huviesssen sido primeras que la lengua, que será un grande absurdo pensarle, y una ignorancia crassa el afirmarlo. Que montón de delatinos! a que vienen aqui el tanto tribunal de la inquisicion, el San Benito ó el crimen de Leza Magestad de la cedilla? que quiere decir la (naturaleza) de los autores della (de la lengua). Con mucha razon excluyó la Academia la cedilla del Abecedario, pues era inutil y de nada servia; por lo mismo, llamaron comunmente a Pineda good for nothing, todos los que le conocieron.

Soy de parecer que la cedilla persevere en su, oficio y empleo, como necessario y mueran los Académicos, aquella por su antigüedad y estos por su novedad. Aquí se contradice, sin saberlo, nuestro pobre Autorcillo, pues su querida cedilla, se halla envuelta, en la sentencia de muerte, que con tanta ojeriza, echa contra los Señores Académicos; pero no quiero cansar mas los lectores con tantas necedades.

He procurado seguir en esta obra la Real Academia Española, assi en su Dictionario como en sus demas obras, sobre la lengua Castellana, todas escritas con la mayor claridad, cultura y doctrina, solo me parece que se equivocaron, en la explicacion y verdadero sentido de las voces siguientes, y algunas otras.

ALUNADO. Cosa a que ha dado la luna, y le ha hecho algun daño, como sucede con el teñir y otras cosas. Que lesion, que daño puede resultar a los cuerpos, de la luna? me parece que ya ha demostrado bastante la falsedad de esta opinion, la filosofia moderna.

AÑIL. No es el coló: azul, pero es el nombre de la planta que crece en Guatimala y otros parages de la America, y de cuyas hojas podridas, se fabrica aquella massa, que sirve para teñir en color azul.

AOJAR. De la ignorante y superficial Gentilidad procede aquel error del mal de ojo, como tambien la infame costumbre de poner a los niños, un amuleto llamado higa para preservarlos del fascino. La higa representa una cosa torpísimas, y era dedicada por los Antiguos Gentiles a su Dios Priapo ó fascino.

ASTROLOGIA. Siento mucho el ver que authorifen los Señores Academicos, aquellas vanas observaciones de las influencias de los astros sobre los cuerpos terrestres, pues debieran al contrario, impugnár semejante error, que puede perjudicar mucho al labrador y al adelantamiento de la agricultura en España.

ATRAVISAR. Algunas veces se toma por hacer mal de ojo a alguno y lo mismo que agjarle, lo que regularmente se suele confesar por los que tienen los ojos vicios y en alguna manera atravesados. No puede resultar mas daño del mirár de unos ojos vicios que del tocár de brazos perléticos, pues el Strabismo ò el mirár atravesado, procede de una retraccion de los ojos hacia un lado, causada por convulsion ò perlesia de uno de sus músculos. Mas estrago hace el mirár de unos ojos hermosos, que quantos ojos vicios ha havido en el mundo: la vista no es activa sino dentro del propio organo, los ojos reciben las especies de los objetos, pero nada embian a ellos. San Chryóstomo (Hem. 8. Super cap. 3. Epistole ad Co. v. 15.) se rie con razón de la fascinacion ò mal de ojo: at, inquis, dice, oculus quisquam fascinavit parvum. Quousque satanica ista? quomodo non ridebunt nos Græci? quomodo non subsannabunt?

BEBEDIZO. Bebida confeccionada y venenosa, que se suele dár, para atraer y convulsiar el amor de otras personas, y con que les inducen a hacer su voluntad. No hay bebida ni comida que pueda determinar ni atraer la voluntad, que es una potencia del alma cuyos actos siempre son perfectamente libres.

BITA'ORA. Se llama en Inglés bittacle y no bittaki.

CASTORLO. Este apreciado medicamento no lo tiene el castór, en los testiculos, como vulgarmente se cree, pero en unas bolsas cercánas a ellos; tambien se hallan tales bolsas en las hembras, cerca de los órganos de la generacion.

COCHINILLA. No es fruta ni grano alguno, es un insecto pequeño, que se cria en Nueva España, tiene seis piernecitas y una trompetilla que le sirve para extraher el jugo de la planta sobre la qual se mantiene, la que los botanistas llaman opuntia major.

DOGO. Viene de la palabra Inglesa Dog, pero no de Dogge que no es Inglés.

DUENDE. Especie de trasgo ò demónio que por enseñar ordinariamente las cosas se llama assi. Despues de lo que ha escrito el eruditissimo Padre Feijóo sobre los duendes, y otras patrañas, se debe estrañar que aún haya hombres letrados en España, que den asienso y crean la existencia de estos entes de razon. En las voces influencia y infortuna se ven authorifados los errores de la astrologia natural, &c.

He procurado en este Diccionario, dár la explicacion de los diferentes sentidos de las voces, con toda la claridad possible, señalando su etymologia y origen quanto me lo han permitido los limites en que me ciñeron los libreros; que me han hecho acortár mucho esta obra; con todo creo que se hallará en ella lo necessario, para facilitar la inteligencia de la lengua Española a los Ingleses que quieran aprenderla. Pues hallarán los significados inmediatos de sus voces, sus usos methaphóricos; verán qualis pertenecen al estilo noble, y quales al vulgar y humilde, y con alguna applicacion, podrán penetrar la energia de los vocablos y phrasas, aunque sea cosa que penda mas de una nativa perspicacia y agudéza, que de enseñanza alguna.

A NEW

D I C T I O N A R Y,

CONTAINING

The ENGLISH before the SPANISH.

DICCIONARIO NUEVO.

SEGUNDA PARTE:

Que contiene el INGLÉS delante del ESPAÑOL.

A, Primera letra del alphabéto no solo en la lengua Inglesa sino en todas las demás que se conocen, menos en la lengua Abissina. Forma un sonido mui desagradable y áspero, siendo muchas veces repetida en el mismo período, como lo observa Cicerón.

A se pronuncia diversamente en Inglés; suena a veces casi como nuestra e Castellana como en cultivated, cultivado, date, fecha; a veces como nuestra a en Español, como en las voces war, guerra; tall, alto, all, todo.

Se podrian dár reglas para la pronunciacion de aquella primera vocal en Inglés; pero tantas son las excepciones, que mejor y mas breve es aprender las por el uso.

A, subst. Ex. a good A, una buena A.

A en Inglés sirve mui a menudo de artículo, que significa un, uno, una. Ex. a house, una casa; a pen, una pluma; a man, un hombre.

A este artículo a, delante de una voz que empieza por una vocal ò por una h muda, se le añade una n, para evitar el sonido desagradable que formára el encuentro de dos vocales. Ex. an eagle, una aguilá, an hour, una hora, an orange, una naranja.

A se pone a veces, en lugar de by, por. Ex. so much a week, tanto por semana; so much a man, tanto por cabeza. Tambien se usa la partícula a entre el verbo, y el participio del tiempo presente, como

Ex. To go a hunting, ir a cazár.

To go a begging, pordioséar.

I am a coming, luego vengo.

He is a doing it, lo está haciendo.

It is a doing, se está haciendo esto.

A, en lugar de of the. Ex. it is one a clock, por it is one of the clock.

Sirve a veces de proposicion delante de un substantivo. Ex. to be a bed, en lugar de to be in the bed, estar en la cama; to go a foot, ir a pié.

A entra tambien en composicion sin quitar ni dar fuerza al sentido de las voces, que compone,

Ex. a far off, to abate; significan lo mismo que los simples far off, lejos y; to late, rebaxar.
